

The AI Act contains transparency obligations for certain systems even when they are not high-risk. Natural persons should be informed when they interact with an AI system such as a chatbot, unless this is obvious from the circumstances. Users of emotion recognition or biometric categorisation systems must be informed. Providers of systems that generate synthetic audio, image, video or text content must support marking or disclosure where required, including deep-fake disclosure duties for deployers.