

A customer support chatbot that answers product questions is usually not high-risk by itself, but users should be informed that they interact with an AI system unless this is obvious. If the chatbot processes personal data, GDPR transparency, minimisation, retention and security still apply. The system should avoid pretending to be a human and should route legal or sensitive requests to a human channel.