

GDPR Article 32 requires appropriate technical and organisational security, considering risk, state of the art, cost, nature and purposes of processing. Measures may include pseudonymisation, encryption, confidentiality, integrity, availability, resilience and testing. Personal data breaches may need to be notified to the supervisory authority under Article 33 and to affected persons under Article 34 when high risk exists.